Until the early 1960's there was little interest in the social effect of relocation. The majority of the studies concentrated on the more practical problems of slum clearance and economic benefits of renewal. The Lavanburg Foundation study was the earliest that considered the social effects, there were a few more in the 40's and 50's but the first detailed survey was the displacement in the Boston West End. A group headed by Marc Fried did an in-depth study which, unfortunately, has not yet been published in its entirety. Many articles resulted from this study but are not completely relevant to relocation problems as they exist today.

This lack of relevancy is the most apparent fact to be learned from this bibliography. Many of the items included touch on the sociological problems but much work remains to be done, particularly among the minority group who face the double problem of economic loss as well as social displacement.

1. The items marked with an asterick are primarily those resulting from the West End relocation project but, with the others noted remain basic to any study of the social effects of relocation.
